

Appleyard & Trew were appointed as Quantity Surveyor by The London Borough of Ealing on this £1.2 million redevelopment in Ealing to create new public square.

This civil engineering project in a busy Town Centre created a special piece of public realm, and was one of then Major Ken Livingstone's 100 public spaces programme. The project won a prize at the London Planning Awards for best community or partnership initiative category.

Phasing requirement was agreed with the Client in advance and incorporated into the tender and contract documentation. Weekly liaison meetings were held between the Contractor and Client to ensure the smooth operation of the contract.
